Fixtures maker Kohler is releasing furnishings designed by American artist Daniel Arsham.

A bookable cabin experience staging contemporary sinks, mirrors, vanities and other bathroom staples from a new collaborative project has landed at the company's hospitality-centric midwest property. Custom on-site art installations and exclusive golfing merch accompany the launch of the Landshapes collection, out this fall.

"Kohler is honored to partner with Arsham and Malbon, two creative forces that share our passion for bold ideas and immersive experiences," said David Kohler, chair and CEO of Kohler Co., in a statement.

"We thoroughly embrace and enjoy the creative process not only as an outlet for innovation but also as an ethos of presenting new possibilities in design."

Resort range

Kohler is dabbling in the worlds of design, travel, sports and art.

Upon entering Destination Kohler the resort features The American Club, a five-star hotel, plus championship golf complexes, spas, lodgings and 500 acres of river and forest the partnership is made apparent. For a limited time, the grounds are home to six large-scale sculptures crafted in the creative's modern art style and dubbed "Arsham in Kohler."

"Incorporating my sculptures into the golf landscape will hopefully spark conversation about creative expression and golf in a whole new way," said Mr. Arsham, in a statement.

"There is a kind of artistic, architectural, even sculptural proposition that's inherent in the game of golf, where you end up playing against the creator of the course itself," he said. "We created an atmosphere where unexpected wonders emerge out of the blue, offering moments of surprise, and beckoning guests and the community to explore our world from a new perspective."

The works frame the release of the larger product range.

Offering views of Lake Michigan from Kohler, Wisconsin, guests can see and interact with the Landshapes line inside the newly introduced Arsham Cabin, now taking reservations as of June 24.

Among the product array arranged within the summer chalets are asymmetrical sinks and mirrors, smart toilets, Japanese-inspired vanities and modern lights that resemble flowing fabric.

The entire Landshapes collection goes live in September, and will be available for purchase online and in-store.
